When you send a print job to a machine, the driver converts your print job into a language the printer can understand.. In order for this to work, your print device and driver must both use the same PDL.. A PDL is a programming code that instructs a digital print engine where and how to place text and graphics onto a page.

What are Page Description Languages? To understand why different machines need different drivers, first we need to understand what a page description language (PDL) is.
